ARLINGTON.
A writer in the Washington Republican, in recommending Arlington as a government experimental farm, says:

"The property was abandoned by the Lee family on the breaking out of the rebellion. Subsequently the United States came in possession of it by virtue of a tax sale. When, during the war, in 1862, a proclamation was issued from the President declaring slaves contrabands of war, this Arlington farm was converted into a rendezvous for these fugitives, as also for white refugees escaping from the States in rebellion. This 'contraband camp' was improved and enlarged until made the Freedman's Village, a home for freedmen after the act of emancipation. Upon the close of the war, and the establishment of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, it was made an asylum for aged and infirm freed-people and a hospital for invalids. The village contained a large number of tenement houses, a hospital, a church, several school-houses, stores, blacksmith and carpenter shops, &c. All the inmates of the asylum, who were able to work at all, were allowed a little plot of ground for a garden. There had congregated, also, a number of families who were self-supporting, who rented some of the tenement houses and a few acres of land each. A large portion of the land on the estate was cultivated by the superintendent of the village for the benefit of the hospital and asylum. This general operation was found to be unprofitable, and in 1867 or 1868, by direction of the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, under the charge of the superintendent, the land on the estate, lying outside of the national cemetery, was surveyed and subdivided into lots of ten acres each, and these lots were rented to the self-supporting freedmen living upon the estate. These lots are still rented and worked by these people. In the fall of 1868 the asylum and hospital were broken up, leaving some but no rent upon the estate, and all the buildings were sold. In closing up the establishment the superintendent, foreseeing that the renting of the property to colored men could not be remunerative to the Government, in making up his report recommended that the property be turned over to the Department of Agriculture. General Capron, then Commissioner of Agriculture, entered earnestly into the plan, and for a time seemed to be on the way to reach Congress. But for some reason, best known to himself, Commissioner Capron failed to ask of Congress such a transfer, and the subject has never been revived.

"The Arlington estate contains about twelve hundred and seventy-five acres of land. The national cemetery incloses some two hundred and fifty or seventy-five acres, so that there remain about nine hundred acres for the purpose indicated. This lies along the Potomac river for about a mile. The Georgetown and Alexandria turnpike runs through the land nearly due north and south, and parallel to the river, and separates the bottom lands from the uplands.

"Upon these nine hundred acres is found almost all the varieties of soil found in Virginia and Maryland, certainly all in this vicinity. On the river front, for nearly the entire length of the estate, are the Arlington marshes, now useless, and a cesspool of vegetable muck and miasma. All this deposit is easily taken out, and can be utilized for fertilizing the soil. Next to this is a strip of very rich intervalle land, which is occasionally flooded by the overflow of the Potomac. Above this, and reaching to the turnpike, is a fine quality of alluvial soil, well adapted to the propagation of all sorts of vegetables and cereals. Next to this are the alluvial lands of sandy and clay soils, just suited to the growth of fruits of all kinds; and lastly, upon the highest elevations are spots valuable for the planting of grapes and other vines. Nothing in the vicinity of Washington can be found so well calculated as this estate for an experimental farm.

"The site is one of the most attractive around Washington, sufficiently near to be easy of access, and it costs the government nothing to use it for this purpose. No land of so good quality, so well situated, and so near the city can be purchased for a less sum than two or three hundred dollars per acre. An excellent road leads from the Long Bridge to it, and another from the Aqueduct bridge and Georgetown. If it were set apart for the use of the Agricultural Department there would very soon be a continuation of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad across the Aqueduct bridge, along the turnpike, through the estate, and come into the city again, by Long Bridge and Fourteenth street to Pennsylvania Avenue, for this railroad company would find it to the interest of the company to construct such extension.

"The present great want of the Agricultural Department is an experimental farm for the propagation of seeds, and no farm can be found possessing so many important requisites as this.

"For purposes of adornment its beauties could be enhanced by its connection with the national cemetery. The marshes, now an annual sewer of malarial sickness to the inhabitants of Arlington as well as of Washington, could be dyked so as to prevent any further overflow, and the peat or vegetable mold could be taken out and spread upon the soil, thus enriching it beyond all precedent; the basin could then be kept clean or filled up by carting sand or gravel from the adjacent hills, and the health of the community thus infinitely enhanced.

"Besides these considerations of utility, there would be added another suburban resort, second in attractions only to the soldiers' home. There can be no valid objections raised to this plan. There lies the farm, the property of the United States, worth at least two hundred thousand dollars, a source of no revenue whatever, and the Agricultural Department suffering for the lack of just exactly such an extent of land.

"All the inhabitants of the country about it, indeed of all Alexandria county, would be such a result with the greatest delight, for thereby their property would be greatly enhanced in value, and a very objectionable social and political element be removed from them, and every thinking man in Washington would regard it as an improvement in its keeping with the progress of the city and its other surroundings."

DOLLAR CORSET

IN THE CITY.

Dress Makers recommend it, as being the best Corset to fit a dress over, because it is cut in such a manner that the front and back seams fit like seams to a dress.

And it is superior to any other Corset now in use, because its peculiar style of cutting gives sufficient fullness at the bosom, without folding at the top; gradually and closely fitting to and over the hips, is longer front and back than ordinary Corsets, and in fact is the only Corset cut in this form.

In addition to the DOLLAR CORSET will be found a large assortment of other makes at the following prices—$1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.50, $3.50 and $5.

HOSIERY.
